

the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are poor has increased from 1.2 billion to 1.6 billion.

There are a number of reasons for this. One is that the world population has increased from 5 billion to 6 billion. Another is that the number of people who are poor has increased in many of the world's poorest countries. This is because of a number of factors, including the fact that many of these countries have experienced economic stagnation or decline, and that many of them have high population growth rates.

There are a number of things that can be done to help reduce the number of people who are poor. One is to help these countries to grow their economies. Another is to help them to improve their social services, such as education and health care. A third is to help them to improve their infrastructure, such as roads and bridges.

There are a number of organizations that are working to help reduce the number of people who are poor. One is the World Bank, which provides loans and technical assistance to developing countries. Another is the International Labour Organization, which works to improve working conditions and social services for workers in developing countries. A third is the United Nations Development Programme, which provides technical assistance and financial support to developing countries.
